When big, bad, scary things happen I knit...

One beautiful spring day about ten years ago I was doing a little show in the Shelby NC. It was called Art on the Square. The "Square" being the block of green lawn and big oaks that surrounded the old courthouse. The pop up tents dotting the square were filled with vendors selling their wares of pottery, soaps, wooden bowls and yarn.

Along about 2:00 in the afternoon, things were a little quiet as the afternoon lull had arrived. I was sitting at my spinning wheel talking with my friends when a very loud explosion went off over on the distant corner of the green. I look over and saw a figure flying perpendicular to the ground, about three feet up. It was surreal, like a low flying superman. The figure then landed and crumpled to the ground in what seemed like slow motion.

Everyone stopped talking and stared. Then people began running to the body. We stayed put, my friends and booth neighbors, and silently held hands.

There had been a high speed chase through the town that resulted in a fatal accident. The police brought out a big tent like shield to cover the car. We were there for hours, watching in shock, as things unfolded. For a couple of weeks I just kept playing the scene back and forth in my brain. Knitting was the only thing that helped.

The flying figure was that of a teenage boy—the only one in the car that survived. So what looked like a nightmare, the flying boy, was actually a miracle. This hat is for him.
